Celebrities – From the Nest – Feathered Topics

Welcome to the first edition of Rosella News. Well, yes, the rumours are true – Chuck and Cherrie our celebrity couple have a penthouse nest in the tree of two bald animals. As we all know these bald animals have built strangely shaped trees in which they live. We fly over them every day.

Cherrie was, at first, concerned about building her nest in the bald animals tree but, after two years, has realized that Chuck made an excellent choice.

Celebrities...

We don't have many celebrities in this closeted world of ours but the branches are filled with speculation. Tarragindi forest's head rosella chook Alex has it on good authority that Chuck and Cherrie's penthouse has been raided by the bald ones and that a strange looking light and stick now look over Cherrie's nest.

Cherrie can't confirm the rumours because she has not settled in for her winter nesting yet – but she will keep us informed. Chuck has been a regular visitor to the bald ones tree and can see no disturbance of the nest. So we will just have to wait.

Feathered Topics...

Our roving rosella reporter has let it be known that the bald animals are debating whether having a camera beaming live to the world is an invasion on the privacy of nesting birds.

The learned Dr Brett Mills of the University of East Anglia has suggested that cameras recording the private lives of Chuck & Cherrie is a breach of privacy.

Quote: "We can never really know if animals are giving consent, but they often do engage in forms of behaviour which suggest they'd rather not encounter humans, and we might want to think about equating this with a desire for privacy."

Of course we, at Rosella News are delighted that the natural, free living lifestyle of our species enjoys the celebrity status that chickcam.com.au brings to us. We can also confirm to the good doctor that neither Chuck, Cherrie or anyone in the Tarragindi Forest rosella clan will suffer any emotional fall out as a result of their nest being televised on the Internet.

Happy flying feathered friends!
